Without the Right Resources, You're Dead in the Water

Your people are your most important asset. Without the right people working on the right projects, your business cannot succeed. But if you're juggling many different projects and lack visibility into what your staff is working on, it's difficult to understand and correct inefficiencies and make sure that employees aren't overworked or underutilized. For example, some employees may be getting burned out while others are sitting idle and unproductive. Often, it's hard to find the right resource for a project, because you're unaware of your employees' strengths and availability.

If you're not meeting your utilization or productivity targets, and you're uncertain whether you have the right resources to meet future project demands, it's time to get serious about resource management.
